Temporary walls you can walk through !!

In the few days since we last visited the site, the aluminium framework for the dividing walls on the mezzanine floor have sprung up in short order. Once again our plan drawings have sprung into life and we can experience the cubic space of the four rooms. So currently we can shortcut through the walls between the rooms, at least until the plaster boards are in position. Our photo to the right was taken from the rear corner of the larger of the two meeting rooms looking towards the front of the church.

(Photo left) This view looking towards the landing space is taken from within the small room top left as you look at the church from York Road. We have had something of a changing of the guard this week as Marc Spencely has taken a well earned break and Roger and Ian (good name) have taken over running the ship. Similarly for EC electricals, Mike has taken over from Chris who is also having his summer holiday.

Meanwhile the cladding guys from the aptly named "Aloft Roofing Services" are within two days of completing the entire roof and it looks absolutely superb. The colour keyed Velux windows blend in perfectly and the Merlin grey steel colour sits so very well with the colour of the Bathstone block work. Very elegant. They are just working on the top ridge, putting the inverted V shaped capping strip all the way along.
